What factors influenced results

During the fund's fiscal year, international equities delivered solid returns despite volatility fueled by trade tensions and geopolitical uncertainty. Strong investment in AI supported gains in large-cap technology stocks. Energy shares also benefited from rising oil prices amid the Middle East conflict. European markets advanced on improving domestic demand and a European Central Bank interest rate cut. Emerging market stocks also rose, driven by robust semiconductor demand in South Korea and Taiwan.

Within the fund, most sectors contributed positively, with the information technology sector being particularly additive. Financials, materials and industrials sectors were also strong contributors. Geographically, companies based in Taiwan, South Korea and the U.K. contributed significantly to absolute returns.

Conversely, consumer discretionary holdings posted negative results during the period. From a country perspective, investments in India, Denmark and China detracted from the portfolio.
