What factors influenced results

During the fund's fiscal year, municipal bonds posted positive returns. The U.S. economy remained resilient, though signs of labor market softening led the U.S. Federal Reserve to implement three 25-basis-point rate cuts. Interest rate volatility drove returns while credit spreads stayed range bound. Strong demand for shorter maturities contributed to a steep municipal yield curve. Yield curve positioning contributed to excess returns relative to the benchmark. The portfolio benefited from the steep curve by overweighting more attractive areas while maintaining underweight portions of the front end where valuations were less attractive. Duration positioning detracted modestly from relative results. Security selection within general obligation and utilities holdings contributed to returns, while corporates detracted from relative results. The portfolio's significant underweight to tobacco contributed positively through sector positioning. Housing holdings added value overall, as positive curve positioning and valuation effects more than offset negative duration and sector/industry effects. Within the fund, investments in special tax bonds were particularly additive. Conversely, holdings in transportation and governmental non-general obligation bonds weighed on returns relative to the benchmark. Exposure to derivatives also detracted from results.

* Bond ratings, which typically range from AAA/Aaa (highest) to D (lowest), are assigned by credit rating agencies such as Standard & Poor's, Moody's and/or Fitch as an indication of an issuer's creditworthiness. In assigning a credit rating to a security, the fund looks specifically to the ratings assigned to the issuer of the security by Standard & Poor's, Moody's and/or Fitch. If agency ratings differ, the security will be considered to have received the lowest of those ratings, consistent with the fund's investment policies. Securities in the "unrated" category (above) have not been rated by a rating agency; however, the investment adviser performs its own credit analysis and assigns comparable ratings that are used for compliance with the fund's investment policies.
