What factors influenced results

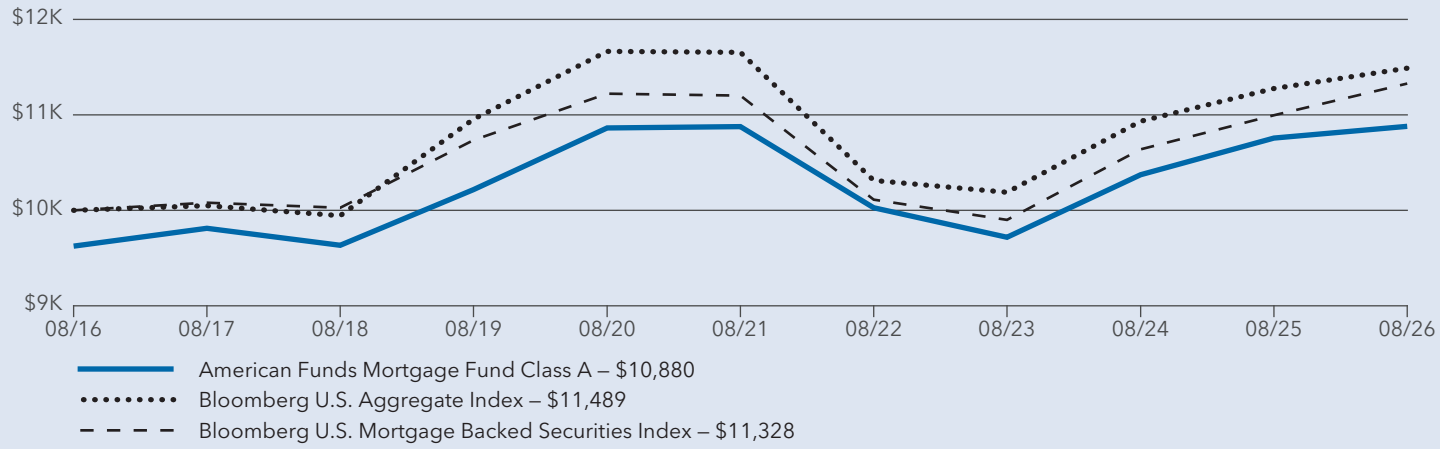

During the fund's fiscal year ending August 31, 2026, most U.S. fixed income sectors posted modestly positive returns, with spreads near the lower end of their 10-year range. The U.S. economy remained resilient, although a softening labor market prompted the Federal Reserve to implement three 25-basis-point rate cuts in 2025, however, no further changes were made thereafter in 2026. Short-term Treasury yields were mixed, while intermediate- and long-term yields increased. Long-term yields remained elevated amid persistent inflation concerns and increased government borrowing. U.S. mortgage-back bonds outpaced the broad fixed income market, according to the Bloomberg U.S. Aggregate Index, as well as other government and investment-grade credit sectors.

Within the fund, sector allocation decisions related to securitized bonds contributed to relative results. Exposure taken via interest rate swaps was also additive for the period as Treasuries came under severe pressure in 2026 amid surging yields that tested multi-year highs.

Broadly speaking, curve and duration positioning were the largest detractors for the fund as interest rates rose and the yield curve flattened. Additionally, sector and security selection weighed on returns at the margin over the period.
