What factors influenced results

Global equity markets delivered strong gains over the fiscal year, despite periods of volatility driven by trade uncertainty and geopolitical tensions. All major regions posted positive returns, with markets outside the United States outpacing throughout 2025. Within emerging markets, equities in China, Taiwan and Korea rallied, offsetting negative returns in India.

Most sectors generated positive returns for the fund, with information technology, communication services and financials being particularly additive. Returns from the consumer discretionary and industrials sectors also exceeded those of the overall portfolio. U.S.-based companies, which represent over half the portfolio, posted strong gains that surpassed the fund's overall return. Companies based in France, the United Kingdom, Taiwan and Canada made meaningful contributions to investment results as well.

Health care was a significant detractor from overall results, posting the lowest return among all sectors, and the fund's substantial exposure to it amplified the negative impact. The materials and real estate sectors also delivered negative returns. On a country basis, holdings in Denmark were the most notable detractor on absolute results.
